Fostering partnerships for continuing training – Cedefop workshop

At the Cedefop workshop on 11 and 12 February over 20 experts from different European countries discussed the role of cooperation between higher education institutions and enterprises for continuous professional development.

This field is still rather underplayed. Cooperation is mostly practiced in the area of research, development and innovation, but less in education, especially when it comes to continuing vocational education and training (CVET). The workshop focused on work-based learning (WBL), i.e. linking WBL in the world of work with learning in higher education for continuous professional development.

Participants discussed which forms of cooperation between higher education and enterprises exist in Europe, and what their key features are. Several examples of cooperation were presented, for instance from UC Leuven-Limburg, Middlesex University and the University of Chester.

Approaches that explicitly link work-based learning in enterprises with learning at higher
